Kesiapan Tingkat Sub-Nasional dalam Integrasi Kawasan: Studi Kasus Sektor Finansial & Investasi di Kota Malang

Abstract

The decision to engage in regional integration means that countries now have to consider at least 3 (three) levels of governance, namely the sub-national, national and supranational level. Using a multi-level governance approach on the financial sector and investment in Malang (East Java, Indonesia), this study finds that sub-national level lacks several important aspect in terms of its preparedness regarding regional integration. Furthermore, with regards to its relationship to the other interconnecting levels, several findings can also be highlighted. First, imperfect decentralisation can actually hinder the positive effect of regional integration since differences in sub-national capacity can widen the development gap between areas in Indonesia. Second, with a weak supranational institutions like ASEAN, countries are actually the main players in Southeast Asia integration and with uneven power distribution, regionalism will only benefit several countries.
