Abstract

This paper analyzes correlation between globalization and democratization in Arab World with the Arab Spring as a case of study. Qualitati ve analysis is used to observe domestic, regional and global dimension of the Arab Spring. This research found that democratization in Arab is cross border phenomena which are involved not only state actors, but also non-state actors starting from individuals and groups of people to global civil society. It is a difficult journey to consolidate democracy in the Middle East due to state actors represented their elites generally prevent oppositions coming to power by using non-democratic action. At the same time, Western countries which have influence to the elites in the Middle East are not serious on democracy. Meanwhile, oppositions mostly coming from Islamic movements by using media and information technology try democratizing political system in Arabic countries. They believe that democracy is a way to prevent a tyrannical power coming to power.
