Knowledge Management Implementation and Its Maturity Level

Abstract

The invention of information technology reduces geographical barriers and changes the way organizations conduct business; enables organizations to easily expand business and customers; drives competitiveness; and a future orientation. The concept of knowledge management was introduced and widely dispersed. The disperse nature of geographical location shows not only organization in state level or in the big city area, but some organizations that have rural based locations also have implemented KM. There were eleven case studies of knowledge management implementation both in public services and private companies. The implementation is measured by using the knowledge management maturity model and knowledge management stages. For Indonesian organizations, hopefully these case studies can give real examples of the knowledge management development process until implementation.
