South-South Bilateral Relations: Argentina’s Political and Trade Links with Southeast Asia (2007-2011)

Abstract

The studies regarding the links between South America and South East Asia nowadays can be observed by increasing and constant ties caused by the growth of world trade interdependence, the development of the communications and means of transportation and the extension of the strategy of growth based on exportations (export led growth), among other phenomena. Our objective is to carry out a diagnosis of the bilateral relations through an analysis of the commercial and political links between Argentina and its main trade partners in Southeast Asia (SEA). Since both regions are considered part of the developing world, the concept of diversification becomes central so as to understand the objectives as well as the obstacles that emerge from the rapprochement. We consider that this paper will be an important contribution to the studies of South-South relations, even though they have been prolific in the hemisphere; they have overlooked the relations among these two regions.
