Abstract

This paper aims to analyze problems and challenges which have been faced in NATO's operation in Afghanistan over the last decade. We encounter that the main security challenges have been derived from Afghanistan's unstable domestic situation which largely caused by the rise of radical groups insurgency. In such violent movements, include elements of terrorist networks and local warriors. In addition, regional powers' recalcitrant attitude towards stability establishment project in Afghanistan has brought about more challenges to NATO's existence in the war-torn society.
