Meaningfulness Role Serving Life and Leadership Against Non-profit Volunteer Life Satisfaction community

Abstrak:

Life satisfaction, one of dominant interests in positive psychology, has been found extremely important for understanding life experience of individuals, including volunteers. However, there were few researches undertook on this subject. The purpose of this study is to examine the relationship between meaning of life and leader's servant characteristics, with respondents overall evaluation of life. Volunteering work people who met the inclusion criterions completed a set of questionnaires for life satisfaction scale, PIL test, servant leadership scale, and demographic questions. Results show that meaning of life didn't serve as mediator in the influence of servant leadership for life satisfaction, but both serve as predictors of volunteers' life satisfaction. Limitations and implications of this study are discussed in the light of possible further research and application.
