Desentralisasi dan Pembangunan: Sebuah Perdebatan

Abstrak:
Decentralisation has been a massive phenomenon. Since more than a decade most developing countries have adopted it for their policy. However, its concept and impact on development have also been debated. The involvement of approaches from various disciplines of science have contributed to the diverse understanding about what is the meaning of decentralisation and its scopes. In addition, theoretical and empirical studies on the impact of decentralisation on development have resulted in inconclusive point of view. This paper argues that in understanding the complexity of decentralisation one may views it from mixed approaches. Furthermore, in order to fill the gap the inconclusive outcomes of decentralisation, this paper suggest putting it in the context of dynamic relation between central and local government relation.

Keyword:

Daftar Pustaka:
Maddick, H Democracy, Decentralisation and Development Asia Publishing House 1963 Bombay